ROMEO'S DILEMMA New York Lady-Killer Who Foun

The City of Newark, N. J., was the the recital of which cannot fail to be of deep interest "to parents and guardians," and which also constitutes a salutary iesson to that large class of young men who ready to fall an easy victim to their circumstances of a most humiliating and partly witnessed by a Herald reporter:

On the afternoon of April 6th, a young sat in the Jersey City depot of the Penn-sylvania Railroad, quietly reading a newspaper while waiting for the train to start for Newark, where she resides. While she sat intently reading, one of the employes approached and handed her an envelope, at once moving away. The young lady, who is about 22 years of age, was so confused at the strange proceeding that she scarcely knew what she was doing. Imagining that every eye was upon her she thrust the envelope into her pocket, and as oper while waiting for the train to start soon as the train was ready, hurried aboard and reached her home in Elm street, "across the railroad," in due time. She told her father what had occurred

The young lady's tather, who is a wellnown citizen of Newark, being at pres ent a member of the Board of Education were indignant over the matter. Ex Ald were indignant over the matter. Ex-Ald. William E. Pine, an intimate friend of the family, said the scoundrel who had thus spir-ached the young lady ought to be thrashed within an inch of his life. The maie relatives thought the same. Mr. Henry, the young lasty's uncle, felt especially incensed, and at once laid a plot to entrap Mr. "T. M. J." and administer a severe flogging. The first thing was to catch him. As a first step Uncle Henry wrote the following letter, getting his niece to copy it:

lece to copy it:
APRIL 6, 1880.—"T. M. J.": How very me. I did not even see you when that note was handed to me. How mad my

I would rather meet you at the park for the reason that there are always so many inquisitive syes studying the "stranger" at most depots. Now, if you write immediately on receiving this (and write a long letter) and just say where and when you will meet me on Saturday afternoon in Newark, or what particular part of the park I shall go to, I will have your answer in time to be guided by if, and I will present myself without fail, and it will present myself without fail, and it will present myself without fail, and or shine. I shall wear a small bunch of violets (my favorites) in my buttonhole and carry a cane; and being an ugly-looking monster, you will have no trouble in knowing your admirer.

bench in the park. The ladies did not go near him. A few days after came the following sarcastic letter:

New York, April 12, 1880,—Miss—,
Newark, N. J. (In haste)—Drar Madam:
Allow me to thank you for your very considerate and prompt answer to my letter, and also to extend my compliments to you for having met me in "Milltary Park!" on Saturday afternoon. What a delightful conversation we had!

"If there is one thing nobler than another in what constitutes the virtues of a women, or perhaps it would be more polite to say lady, which would be as true nevertheless, it is her entire unselfishness; and, on the contrary, there is none more pitying, or a trait so unpardonable, as country or idly trilling with the feelings of others.

"It is vain, light girls, or soured and withhele midden who have never the here."

coquerry or idly trifling with the feelings of others.

"It is vain, light girls, or soured and wrinkled maidens who have passed their 40th summer, who devote their time to trifling and playing false to themselves and others. No steriling woman would. I know you made no direct appointment with me, but I was encouraged at least to hope for an answer to my letter ere this, and knowing that you must have received mine Friday, and not hearing from you, I gave you the benefit of my doubts as to your seriousness.

"I took the half-past 3 train Saturday iternoon for Newark, and readily found Military Park,' where I smoked and read 'Military Park,' where I smoked and read antil about twenty minutes past 7 r. m. I returned to New York on the half-past 7 train, feeling quite disappointed, and with my faith in woman's constancy considerably shaken. Until I hear from you I will form no positive opinion, but my jadgment of character will be proved sadiy deficient, if you conclude not to write me. Hoping this first misunderstanding will be satisfactorily explained, I remain yours, very truly, T. M. J." "SHY JULIET" SHIES BACK.

Uncle Henry promptly answered the foregoing in the following note:

Name some evening later and I will sure ly meet you without another disappointment. You need not fear for the stric confidence I place in my friend Leonora She is pure gold. Hoping to bear from you soon, and that your bad humor has even then. Have you any plan to propose? Of sourse, I dare not send you my right name, but any letters sent to Leonora Tichenor, Newark, N.J., will reach me, as I have a friend by that name in whom I can trust, and who will be glad to help me in any adventure. I think you will like her if you ever get acquainted. I are very anxious to hear from you.

Oh! he very careful, as my pa would be awful mad if he found it out. Yours truly."

No name was signed. "Leonora Tichenor" is Uncle Henry's wife, that being her maiden name. The above letter was forwarded to "T. M.J.," under cover of a well-known South William street mercantile house. First it was submitted to Gen.

William Ward, Postmaster of Newark, accompanied by a note from Uncle Henry, his friend, relating the facts.

SWALLOWING THE BAIT.

Within a lew days after the following came in reply, showing clearly that the gudgeon had snapped greedily at the fisherman's bait:

"New York, April S.—Dear —, etc.:

From your style of writing I should judge you to be of rather a romantic disposition and possessed of a lively appreciation of the dangers of adventure. There is always a joyous thrill or pleasant expectanion. The control of the dangers of adventure. There is always a joyous thrill or pleasant expectanion. On Friday there was a great bustle in the young lady's house in Elm street. Uncle I Henry was in New York when the letter arrived. He got home about six o'elock. I There was little time to make preparations to deceive "Romeo." At first it was resolved to thrash him. To this the ladies demurred, and it was then decided to bring him to the lady's house, present him to an assembled company, and then fully expose him. Accordingly the young lady and her aunt, followed by Uncle Henry, repaired to Military Park at the appointed hour, and there easily found "Romeo," violets, cane, and eigar. The ladies eleverly carried out their part, and led the fellow to the residence on Elm street. He was taken into the parlor and preface I have seen, or am I lured and at tracted by coquelry. On the contrary, it is a face one meets with but seldom in the short time that we have to linger in this transitory sphere, and one that combines intelligence with beauty, and indicates a fine womanly feeling, coupled with a grace pleasing to the eye, that constitutes must also a downward to the eye, that constitutes mental description I formed of you while you sat reading in the depot; and it was the mental description I formed of you while you sat reading in the depot; and it was the confidence I had in my judgment of reading character that prompted me to seek your acquaintance as I did.
